7%. A state of habitual blind obedience among leaders of the military and police, one which sometimes leads to wholesale atrocities. He is also a skilled martial artist, being able to control himself, his dragon minions, and his vicious sidekicks in a battle. In reality, the government is out of control. The government murders its own citizens, and its police force is led by a man so corrupt that he will do anything to save his own life. Stuntman V: I am going to murder him. Stuntman R: Please don't. Stuntman V: Do you think he would mind? Stuntman R: Of course not. Stuntman V: Then why not do it? Stuntman R: I would never murder him. Stuntman V: Why not? Stuntman R: Because... I love him. Stuntman V: You love him? Stuntman R: Yes. Stuntman V: And he loves you too. Stuntman R: You know that for a fact? Stuntman V: Of course. Look, let's not overanalyze this. Stuntman R: I am sorry. Mongols The Mongols are a warrior race, living mostly in Mongolia. They believe that death is a release from the constant suffering of life, and often glorify killing. The Mongols are a proud and proud people, having a very proud history. They wish to be respected for their skills as warriors, and are often praised for their skills in battle. The Mongolians believe that their long history has prepared them for the task of winning the Great Game. They believe that they have the weapons, the skill, and the will to win the game. They enjoy the open field, and favor large, open fields with plenty of room to maneuver their horses and foot soldiers. Frequently, the Mongols use a more mobile and agile army than the standard, conventional Chinese Army. To this end, they are happy to let their foot soldiers outrage the Chinese, and attack with a quick-reaction force. This strategy lends itself to a massive shock-attack, by being able to surround the Chinese from all sides and avoiding wasteful losses in men and equipment.
